But Veit very rarely travelled on his own –
his little helper was always there.

That little dog went everywhere that Veit the messenger went.

They travelled to Münster once every week, always on foot.

Come sun, rain or shine, the two were very professional in carrying out their task.

But one day, Hessian troops invaded.
Soldiers would not let the people of Rheine out or in.
The captain took what he liked – women, money,
prized possessions – with no one to stop him.

The punishment really hit the town hard.
All of Rheine was now trapped.
They suffered from hunger, fear and misery from violence,
the heart of the Hessian captain was as cold as ice.

Then the messenger had an idea, to do with a dog which knew every twist and turn of the road to Münster. And so, the dog set off in the pitch black night, and passed on the cry for help when he reached Münster.

In Münster, the situation quickly became clear.
The people of Rheine didn't know it, but help was on its way!
Strong troops stormed the city, defeated the Hessian defence, and in 1635, Rheine was a free city again!

Veit, the unforgettable hero!
You can see why we like him so much.
But we believe that there were actually two heroes in the tale, and both were just as heroic!
